ADIKINI Scovia (Ms)

Contribution of sweet potato viruses to cultivar decline in Uganda

Ms. ADIKINI Scovia studied how sweetpotato degenerate given starting planting material is clean and the extent to which viruses contribute to yield decline in central and eastern Uganda. Being vegetatively propagated, and coupled with lack of a proper seed system, sweetpotato allows accumulation and perpetuation of viruses that cause sweetpotato virus disease. The study found that, Cultivars 'Beauregard' and 'Ejumula' degenerated within a single season. Cultivars 'Dimbuka' and 'NASPOT 1' gradually declined in yield and can be grown for up to three and five seasons in central and eastern Uganda before replacing with clean vines. Viruses caused yield losses between 40 to 95 per cent and resulted in poor vine quality. The study recommends establishment of virus indexing services and multiplication of clean planting material to support sustainable production of sweetpotato in Uganda. This study was funded by International Potato Center and was supervised by Prof. Settumba Mukasa and Dr. Richard Gibson.

AGABA Rolland

Genetic improvement of yam bean (Pachyrhizus species) for high storage root yield, dry matter content and nutritional quality in Uganda

Mr. AGABA Rolland studied the genetic control mechanism of yield, dry matter and nutritional traits in yam bean, a rich protein-iron legume root crop in the Americas, Asia and West Africa, but newly introduced in Uganda. Rolland's study identified high genetic potential to breed high yielding, high dry matter and nutritious yam bean cultivars confirmed by high genetic variability, additive genetic effects and response to selection. These findings could enhance development of farmer-preferred cultivars and accelerate adoption of yam bean into existing farming systems. Improved yam bean cultivars would offer a nutritious root crop rich in protein, iron, zinc, and vitamins likely to mitigate micronutrient deficiencies in Uganda. This study was funded by Beligum Technical Cooperation through CIP, the European Union through ARISE Intra ACP, Carnegie Corporation through RUFORUM and supervised by Prof. Phinehas Tukamuhabwa and Emeritus Prof. Patrick Rubaihayo.

AGBAHOUNGBA Symphorien

Genetic study of cowpea resistance to flower bud thrips (Megalurothrips sjostedti Trybom)

Mr. AGBAHOUNGBA Symphorien studied the genetic basis of cowpea resistance to flower bud thrips, the most damaging insect pest of cowpea at flowering stage. He screened Uganda cowpea germplasm in different environments and found eleven resistant stable lines. He also found that the increase in the concentration of flavonoids and sugar in cowpea lines provoked less flower bud thrips damage in cowpea and could serve as selection traits for enhancement of cowpea resistance to flower bud thrips. In addition, the lines TVU-1471, TVU-1509 and TVU-473 were found to be good transmitters of resistance to flower thrips. Two microsatellites markers were identified to be associated with cowpea resistance to flower thrips. Farmers in the growing areas in Uganda could adopt the resistant stable lines. The study was funded by Intra-ACP CSAA project and RUFORUM and was supervised by Prof. Patrick Rubaihayo and Dr. Jeninah Karungi-Tumutegereize.

CHINDIME Sylvia (Ms)

An assessment of innovations among smallholder dairy farmers in Malawi

Ms. CHINDIME Sylvia studied the mechanism in which smallholder dairy farmers innovate to take advantage of opportunities that are triggered by the ever-changing market demands in Malawi. Her analysis demonstrated that it is possible for a fair and rewarding innovation system in Malawi when there are regulated relationships among actors to avoid over exploitation of the weak and vulnerable smallholder farmers. Her study also demonstrated the need to create space for joint learning, mutual collaborations between actors, and building dynamic supportive institutional ecosystems for a functional dairy innovation system. Strengthening farmer associations is the platform for their empowerment to effectively participate in partnerships and influence in sustainable dairy innovations in Malawi. The study was funded by SHARE INTRA ACP EU Mobility, and was supervised by Prof. Paul Kibwika, Dr. Prossy Isubikalu and Dr. Mizeck Chagunda.

KALULE Okello David

Rosette virus disease complexes assessment and development of groundnut regeneration protocol in Uganda

Mr. KALULE Okello David determined the distribution of groundnut rosette disease symptom types in Uganda, characterized the viral disease components, and developed a regeneration protocol for Ugandan preferred cultivars. He documented the predominant groundnuts rosette symptom types and current seed systems in relation to rosette disease management. The characterization of the rosette virus complexes elucidated the causes, distribution and its possible control for informed management decisions. The developed regeneration protocols have opened ways for tissue culture development and genetic engineering approaches for groundnut rosette virus managements and other stresses. These study findings are useful in development of groundnuts varieties with durable resistances, essential in mitigating food and nutrition security along the groundnut value chain. The study was funded by Millennium Science Initiative and Peanut Mycotoxin Innovation Lab of USAID, and supervised by Prof. Phinehas Tukamuhabwa and Dr. Mildred Ochwo Ssemakula.

MUGIZI Francis

Analysis of tourism trends, local community participation and contribution of tourism to rural livelihoods in Murchison Falls Conservation Area, Uganda

Mr. MUGIZI Francis studied the links between tourism trends, local community participation and contribution of tourism to rural household livelihoods in Murchison Falls Conservation Area, Uganda. The findings indicated a positive growth trend in tourist arrivals in Murchison Falls Conservation Area since 1995. Level of education, engagement in farm labour, income and landholding influenced local communities' participation in tourism activities from which they benefited indirectly. To enhance local communities' participation and sustain their socio-economic benefit from tourism, there is a need to continuously strengthen the marketing strategies and enhance local communities' capacity in business development and management through vocational training. This study was funded by Carnegie Corporation of New York, and supervised by Prof. Joseph Obua and Dr. Jim Ayorekire.

MUGUME Isaac

Optimization of numerical models for operational weather forecasting over Uganda

Mr. MUGUME Isaac analyzed the accuracy of the weather research and forecasting (WRF) model and the consortium for small-scale modeling (COSMO) model with the aim of customizing an appropriate model to improve weather prediction for Uganda. Weather impacts many sectors namely agriculture, health and transport among others, therefore, weather prediction process should be reliable and the forecasts provided timely. Isaac found the WRF model objective; providing the forecasts timely; and could assist in providing continuous updates of weather. Isaac also found the WRF model presenting a better performance in predicting rainfall compared to other models and recommends it for operational weather forecasting. This study was funded by the WIMEA-ICT project under the NORHED program and, was supervised by: Dr. Charles Basalirwa, Dr. Daniel Waiswa and Prof. Joachim Reuder.

NDAGIRE Catherine Tamale (Ms)

Reliability and validity of body composition, dietary intake and physical activity measures among children and adolescents in Kampala, Uganda

Ms. NDAGIRE Catherine Tamale established the validity and reliability of body composition, dietary intake and physical activity measures in children and adolescents in Kampala, Uganda. Findings revealed that among 8-14 year-olds, the Tanita SC-331S BIA device was valid for estimating body composition but not valid among the 15-19 year-olds. Findings further established that reliability of the fruit and vegetable consumption and the physical activity items of Uganda's Global School's Health Survey questionnaire were good. There was a high prevalence of weight misperception, body image dissatisfaction, inadequate fruit intake, vegetable intake, physical activity and excessive sedentary behavior among children and adolescents. These findings have potential to inform programming for public health decisions and policy making by agencies such as Ministry of Health and Ministry of Education and Sports. This study was funded by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), and was supervised by Prof. John H. Muyonga and Dr. Dorothy Nakimbugwe.

Nutritional composition and bioactive components of selected indigenous fruits in Uganda and Rwanda

Mr. OMUJAL Francis investigated the nutritional and medicinal values of indigenous edible fruits commonly called "ensali", "enyonza", "empafu", and "matugunda in Uganda; and amachawongo in Samia languages of Uganda; and "imuufe" and "amasasari" in kinyarwanda language of Rwanda. The findings of this study showed that these fruits are rich in dietary fibre, essential vitamins, minerals, unsaturated oils and medicinal antioxidants that keep the body healthy and prevent diseases like hypertension, cancer, and anemia. Government should promote growing, consumption and processing of these fruits into nutritious juice, jam and wine products. This study was funded by Inter-University Council of East Africa, and was supervised by Dr. John Bosco L. Okullo, Prof. Jacob Godfrey Agea and Dr. Agnes Namutebi (RIP).

SSEKUUBWA Enoch

Ecological attributes of restored tropical forests in Kibale National Park, western Uganda

Mr. SSEKUUBWA Enoch evaluated seed removal, seedling colonization, tree succession and productivity as ecological attributes and their drivers in restored tropical forests. The study was motivated by the paucity of information about restoration outcomes for afro-tropical forests. He found that both active and passive methods restore forest attributes, but the attributes were higher in passive than active restoration. The attributes increased with duration of restoration, and decreased with increasing distance from natural forests. The size of restored forests did not affect attributes. These findings can guide planning and implementation of restoration of degraded tropical forests. This study was funded by NORAD, and was supervised by Prof. Mnason Tweheyo, Prof. Stein Moe and Dr. Vincent Muwanika.

KABANGA Milly Margaret (Ms)

Competence based education of nurses and midwives in Uganda: a case of Mulago National Referral Hospital

Ms. KABANGA Milly Margaret examined the appropriateness of the Competence Based Education (CBE) in preparing competent nurses and midwives in Uganda. This was necessitated by the current outcry in the country about the declining levels of competences of health workers. Her research found that the CBE approach was appropriate while the implementation process of CBE faced many challenges such as: inadequate resources and insufficient support given to trainees during clinical placement. The study recommended sensitization of implementers and key stakeholders on best CBE approaches, providing adequate resources, improving working conditions at students' practicum training sites, and recruiting instructors to support increasing student numbers. This study was self-funded and supervised by Prof. Christopher Mugimu and Dr. Joseph. Oonyu

KAWEESI Muhamadi

Academic staff research orientations at Makerere University

Mr. KAWEESI Muhamadi studied academic staff research orientations at Makerere University, prompted by concerns raised in reports and studies that academic research seems to be more discipline centered and more understood in terms of journal articles that are geared toward promotion. The study established that although academic research is conceptualised in terms of varied research orientations, the basic/academic and donor-driven research orientations are dominant. It was further discovered that disciplinary cultures inform research orientations and that disciplinary cultures are transforming due to conformity to external rules. The study recommended promoting academics on a broader criterion that includes number of publications and contribution to policy and the community, diversifying research funding sources, emphasizing an open system's perspective to knowledge production, and collaborating with genuine international development partners. The study was self-funded and was supervised by Dr. Ronald Bisaso and Dr. Betty Akullu Ezati.

LUHAMYA Aloyce

Integration of ICT in teaching and learning among educators in public Teacher Training Colleges in Tanzania: an application of the theory of planned behavior (TPB)

Mr. LUHAMYA Aloyce tested the theory of planned behavior (TPB) using the integration of information communication and technology (ICT) in teaching and learning (IITL) among educators in public teacher training colleges (TTCs) in Tanzania. His study was prompted by the low IITL among educators in public TTCs in Tanzania. Using the positivist approach he found out that six of the eight hypotheses as suggested by TPB were supported. He thus concluded that TPB was a reasonable theory in explaining IITL in the study context. He hence made recommendations for effective IITL among educators in public TTCs in Tanzania. The study was self-sponsored and was supervised by Dr. Fred E. K. Bakkabulindi and Dr. Paul B. Muyinda.

MITANA John Mary Vianney

Philosophical assumptions of educational assessment in primary schools in Uganda: case of Kampala and Kabale Districts

Mr. MITANA John Mary Vianney explored the philosophical assumptions underpinning educational assessment in primary schools in Uganda. The study revealed that the current assessments are highly influenced by essentialist epistemological notions such as platonic dualism of mind and body, mind and world; Cartesian intellectualism of logical reasoning and; Kantian abstract intellectualism. Furthermore, the current assessment mainly calls for low-order thinking skills at the expense of High-Order Thinking skills (HOTs). The assessments were also found to be unfair to the learners as they mainly focus on linguistic and logical intelligences at the expense of other intelligences such as musical, existential and naturalistic intelligences. The study recommends inclusion of more proportions of HOTs; and a focus on alternative assessments that cater for learners' multiple intelligences. This study was funded by Luigi Giussani Institute of Higher Education, and was supervised by Dr. Anthony Mugagga Muwagga and Dr. Fr. Cornelius Ssempala.

An education perspective of the management of solid waste by government and private sector in Kampala City

Mr. MUGWERI Fredrick studied solid waste management in Kampala city from an education perspective. The study demonstrated that in areas where education was effective, more waste was collected and disposed of. The private sector performed significantly better than the government agency (KCCA) until the latter was reformed in 2011 when there was improved education and governance. It was concluded that the focused education and effective monitoring of waste collection and disposal were more important determinants of performance than being either a private or government agency. However, inadequate education and funding were some of the education related challenges. The study recommends education should to be strengthened in all divisions with focus on waste separation and composting. This study was funded by Kafuko Investment Group, Kamuli and was supervised by Dr. Joseph Oonyu and Dr. John Sentongo

MULEKE Paul

Effects of neo-colonialism on the O-Level history education in Uganda

Mr. MULEKE Paul investigated the effects of neo-colonialism on the O-Level history education in Uganda. The retrospective and perspective analysis singled out neo-colonialism as the key determinant of current state of O-Level history education in Uganda and argued that African indigenous education was more progressive, vocational based, practical, and creative; and was relevant to the needs and aspirations of the African people. The study found that the current O-Level history education curriculum, policies and management do not fully reflect the needs of the society in Uganda. The study recommended that education curriculum designers, policy makers and administrators should emphasize skill development rather than knowledge acquisition at O-Level history education in Uganda. This study was self-funded, and was supervised by Dr. Morris Bakaluba Tamale and Dr. Betty Akullu Ezati.

The contribution of geography education in climate change mitigation in Moroto and Budada Districts, Uganda

Mr. MWANGU Alex examined the contribution of geography education in climate change mitigation in Uganda. In this study, the key elements of geography education at O'level; the curriculum objectives, content, pedagogical methods were found to enhance climate change mitigation. However, the assessment strategies are inadequate and do not stimulate climate change mitigation. This study adds value to education and climate change mitigation realms and contrives a framework for providing a robust climate change education in geography and the entire education system. The study was funded by Nile Basin Ecological Organization and, was supervised by Prof. Alice Merab Kagoda and Prof. Christopher. B. Mugimu.

NABAKIIBI Agnes (Ms)

The teachers' pedagogical competencies and A-level students' performance in practical Geography in central Uganda

Ms. NABAKIIBI Agnes investigated the relationship between teachers' pedagogical competencies and A-level students' performance in practical Geography in central Uganda. The study found most the geography teachers had inadequate knowledge and skills to effectively teach A-level practical Geography. A-level students had difficulties in interpretation of maps and photographs, statistical data and were unable to relate what they have learnt to everyday life experiences. Majority of the teachers used oral and chalk method to teach and preferred traditional form of assessment. Policy reforms should emphasize mandatory practical work that is assessed continuously by teachers under UNEB supervision. There is also need to strengthen both in-service and pre-service training focusing on pedagogy and assessment strategies and to support teachers to conduct quality practical work in Geography. The study was funded self-funded and was supervised by Dr. Joseph Oonyu and Dr. Anthony M. Mugagga.

NALUKWAGO Harriet (Ms)

Decentralization policy and human resource management of Universal Primary Education in Central Uganda

Ms. NALUKWAGO Harriet study evaluated the implementation of decentralization policy and human resource management in Universal Primary Education sector in Central Uganda. The findings revealed that there was a mismatch between the staff needs and national staff ceiling policy, thus the personnel allocated based on the national staff ceiling policy are incommensurate to the local needs at the district. The decentralization policy has limitations that compromise the effectiveness of the important human resource management functions in the districts. In regard to Universal Primary Education, there is an urgent need to revisit and harmonize the national staff ceiling policy, and decentralization policy itself. This study was self sponsored, and was supervised by Prof. Christopher B. Mugimu and Dr. Betty Akullu Ezati.

NAMAGANDA Justine (Sr.)

Understanding male hegemonic presence in the actions of female students in higher education institutions

Sr. NAMAGANDA Justine investigated how male hegemonic presence was reflected in female students' actions in Makerere University. Findings revealed that male hegemonic presence is reflected in female students' lifestyle through healthy competitive spirit, confidence and instilled fear, inferiority, and policy exclusion; students' participation in leadership through incompetency, dependency, inadequacy, and impotency; students' academic interaction through healthy competition, focusing and feeling downgraded and disfavored; and students' career aspirations through encouragement, inspiration and uncertainty. This study concluded that while deprived state and distractive contexts may stunt achieving identity, enthusiasm and ambitions enhance pursuit for true identity. The study recommends higher education institutions to make more gender inclusive and equitable policies, equitable framework for leadership assumption, fair involvement of all in academics and projects, and provision of guidance and morale in choosing and pursuing careers. The study was privately funded and was supervised by Dr. Betty Akullu Ezati and Dr. Joseph Kimoga.

Institutional and disciplinary perspectives of community transformation in Gulu University

Mr. OFOYURU Denis Thaddeus studied institutional and disciplinary perspectives of community transformation in Gulu University. The study found that the motto, mission and vision acted as policy for community transformation; national policies informed activities for community transformation at the disciplinary level; support for community transformation was routine and non-distinctive; there was inter- and intra-disciplinary unevenness and variation; and functional imbalance in community transformation activities. The study recommends that the university council should formulate mainstream institutional policies for community transformation activities; top management should institutionalize deliberate support for community transformation activities with designated structures and disciplinary fields should adopt inter- and multi-disciplinary approach to community transformation activities. The study was funded by Gulu University and DAAD; and was supervised by Dr. Ronald Bisaso and Dr. Anthony Mugagga.

Rotaviruses in Uganda: molecular epidemiology and potential of zoonotic transmission

Dr. BWOGI Josephine investigated rotavirus infection, strains and transmission in humans and animals. The study found rotavirus infection was common in under five year old children admitted with acute diarrhoea in Central Uganda, with more than 1 in 3 infected. The study also found that children who were wasted or hospitalized for more than 5 days were less likely to have rotavirus infection. Rotavirus infection in cows, pigs and goats was low (4%), but with high genetic diversity. There was transmission of rotavirus infection between humans and animals, and between different domestic animals. The study findings will be useful in assessing the impact of introduction of rotavirus vaccination in Ugandan children. This study was funded by THRiVE, Cambride-Africa ALBORADA Research Fund, WHO, and was supervised by Dr. Charles Karamagi, Prof Miren Iturriza-Gomara, Dr. Ulrich Desselberger and Dr. Samuel Malamba.

Effects of Mycobacterium tuberculosis infection on B cell responses

Mr. KIMUDA Simon Gwapa studied whether infection with Mycobacterium tuberculosis, the germ that causes tuberculosis (TB) had an effect on a key blood cell population in the human body known as B cells. These cells produce substances known as antibodies that are important in protecting people against disease-causing germs. This research study determined whether the quality of antibodies in terms of how well they bind to germs was affected during TB disease. It found that people with TB produced antibodies of good quality. This information improves the understanding of the immunity against TB and may help in the development of new treatments. This study was supported by the Wellcome Trust, the UK Commonwealth Scholarship Commission and the DELTAS Africa Initiative, and was supervised by Dr. Bernard S. Bagaya, Dr. John G. Raynes and Dr. Stephen Cose.

Medicines for children: policy provisions, perspectives, availability and practices in Uganda

Mr. NSABAGASANI Xavier's study assessed the extent of implementation of the World Health Assembly resolution of 'better medicines for children' in Uganda. The results indicate (1) inclusion of appropriate medicine strength for children and omission of child-friendly dosage formulations, (2) limited availability and utilization of the recommended medicines for children in public facilities and (3) omission of child-appropriate formulations in the Integrated Management of Childhood Illness (IMCI) framework – posing practical difficulties in treating children. Ministry of Health should integrate child appropriate dosage formulations into the essential medicines list and revise the IMCI guidelines to reflect child-appropriate dosage formulations. This study was funded by Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs in collaboration with University of Copenhagen and Makerere University, and was supervised by Prof. Jasper Ogwal-Okeng, Prof. Ebba Holme Hansen, Prof. Freddie Ssengooba and Prof. Anthony Mbonye.

Correlating rifampicin and isoniazid concentrations with clinical outcomes in tuberculosis-HIV co-infected patients

Dr. SEKAGGYA Christine Nagita investigated the association between blood concentrations of anti-tuberculosis drugs, tuberculosis treatment response and toxicities including peripheral neuropathy and liver toxicity among tuberculosis-HIV co-infected individuals. She found sub-optimal anti-tuberculosis drug concentrations, which were associated with unfavorable treatment outcomes including death, treatment failure and delayed clearance of mycobacteria from sputum. However, the drug concentrations were not associated with neuropathy and hepatotoxicity. These findings inform the need for therapeutic drug monitoring and increase in the dose of isoniazid and rifampicin in tuberculosis-HIV co-infected patients in order to improve treatment outcomes and reduce infectiousness of patients. This study was funded by the Infectious Diseases Institute and University of Zurich in collaboration with MESAU consortium; and was supervised by Prof. Moses Kanya, Dr. Pauline Byakika-Kibwika, Dr. Barbara Castelnovo and Dr. Mohammed Lamorde.

WANDERA Bonnie

Alcohol consumption and alcohol reduction intervention among HIV infected persons in a large urban HIV clinic in Uganda

Dr. WANDERA Bonnie's studied the behavioural, biological and immunological correlates of alcohol consumption among persons living with HIV/AIDS (PLHIV). He found that PLHIV consuming alcohol, were more likely to co-report unprotected sexual intercourse, multiple sexual partners, non-disclosure of HIV status to sexual partners as well as having lower adherence to anti-retroviral drugs (ARVs). Furthermore the effects of alcohol on their immunity was not directly related, but rather mediated through alcohol's effect on adherence to ARVs. This study highlights the need to screen and manage concomitant alcohol use in PLHIV with poor ARV adherence, using interventions of more than a single alcohol counselling session. The study was funded by the Wellcome Trust through Training Health Researchers in Vocational Excellence in East Africa (THRiVE) Consortium, and was supervised by Dr. Nazarius Tumwesigye, Dr. David Mafigiri and Dr. Ajay Sethi.

Exploration of Mycobacterium tuberculosis thymidylate kinase based culture- and sero-diagnostic-assays towards rapid and easy detection of tuberculosis

Dr. WAYENGERA Misaki explored novel ways for rapid, easy and more precise detection of Tuberculosis (TB): a leading infectious-cause of human death whose diagnosis remains problematic. His findings show that detecting one of the pathogen's DNA synthesis enzymes reduces timelines for diagnosing TB in-cultures, is a million times more sensitive than the widely smear-microscopy, and can differentiate latent from active TB. This is premise for development of rapid TB culture technologies, a litmus test to replace smear microscopy, and the next generation of rapid serology tests for TB. ZAKUMUMPA Henry

Examining the sustainability of anti-retroviral therapy (ART) scale-up implementation in health facilities in Uganda

Mr. ZAKUMUMPA Henry examined the implementation strategies devised by health facilities in Uganda to promote the sustainability of ART service delivery. The study revealed that health facilities made extensive modifications to ART service delivery models through spacing clinic appointments and introducing pharmacy-only refill programs for stable patients. Health facilities diversified funding streams by co-opting private foundations. Innovations in financing such as 'VIP' HIV clinics, special HIV insurance schemes were found in for-profit providers. Non-physician-centered staffing models were common. To address health worker absenteeism on busy ART clinic days, monetary and non-monetary incentives were devised. This study demonstrated that large hospitals have a higher capacity of sustaining ART services and interventions targeting lower-level facilities are critical. The scale-up of innovations in ART service delivery models is recommended. This study was funded by Consortium for Advanced Research Training in Africa (CARTA) and was supervised by Prof. Freddie Sengooba and Prof. Sara Bennett.

Optimizing spawning conditions and growth performance of larvae and juveniles in Barbus altianalis (Boulenger, 1900)

Mr. ARUHO Cassius investigated the spawning conditions and growth performance of larvae and juveniles in Barbus altianalis (Kisinjja), a high value indigenous fish in Uganda, but its commercial farming has been limited by access to sufficient quality seed. This study established that African catfish pituitary gland hormone was effective and cheaper than other hormones in breeding Kisinjja to produce quality fingerlings. The best temperature range for hatching eggs was 24°C - 27°C, and for fingerling growth was 27°C - 30°C. Development process of enzyme activity in fingerlings confirmed that outdoor nursing was successful after second week of hatching. Government should train and certify seed multipliers in using the developed production protocol to produce quality seed for the species' farming in order to improve people's livelihood. This study was funded by Government of Uganda through NARO and was supervised by Prof. Justus Rutaisire and Prof. Frederick Bugenyi.

Radiofrequency electromagnetic field exposure from mobile phone base stations in Kampala Uganda

Ms. AYUGI Gertrude investigated the exposures to radiofrequency electromagnetic radiations from mobile phone base stations in Kampala. There were four communication technologies that were considered in the study. Exposure was determined using a spectrum analyzer, antennas, GPS Logger and Spectrum Analysis Software. Spectrum occupancy of the technologies investigated was observed to be very low. Variation of exposure in space and with time was assessed. A Lognormal distribution model of field exposure distributions in Kampala was developed. The maximum exposures recorded were compared with the set guidelines and they were found to be low. This showed that the public is safe from these radiations. The study was funded by African Development Bank under the AfDB HEST PhD Scholarship Project and was supervised by Dr. Akisophel Kisolo and Dr. Tumps Winston Ireeta.

Modeling the dynamics of banana xanthomonas wilt: incorporating disease drivers and resurgence in smallholder systems in Uganda

Ms. NAKAKAWA Juliet studied the use of mathematical models to understand the dynamics of banana xanthomonas wilt disease and identifying conditions that facilitate resurgences as a basis for targeting and improving effectiveness of control measures. Models were developed and analyzed to determine the long time effect of the disease if control measures are not effectively implemented. Results show that in absence of tool-mediated transmission and with effective phytosanitation in which single disease stem removal is carefully applied, clean suckers can be obtained from mats that previously had an infected plant. For effective disease management, it is important to assess the endemic level of the plantation before application of control measures since it is costly when the plantation is heavily infested. To avoid resurgence, farmers must promptly remove infected plants and male buds. The study was funded by McKnight Foundation under Bioversity International, and was supervised by Prof. Joseph Y. T. Mugisha, Prof. Michael W. Shaw, and Dr. Eldad Karamura.

Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

GAALYA Micah Samuel

Trade openness, import demand and taxes in East African Countries

Mr. GAALYA Micah Samuel examined the effects of trade openness on imports and taxes for East African Countries. He found that an increase in the tariff rate reduces imports at both aggregate and disaggregated levels but positively influences tax performance. Furthermore, he established that an increase in tax rates beyond 9.2 percent for total tax, 12.2 percent for indirect tax and 14.0 percent for trade taxes would result in a decrease of taxes. He recommended that governments of EAC countries could use trade openness reforms, particularly the tariff rate to minimize importation of goods that can be produced locally; as this will help EAC countries to manage their trade balance and improve tax performance. This study was privately funded and was supervised by Dr. Eria Hisali and Dr. Edward Bbaale.

MUTEBI Rebecca Kalibwani (Ms)

Technical efficiency, Technological change, and returns to scale in the production of selected food crops in Uganda

Ms. MUTEBI Rebecca Kalibwani investigated the technical efficiency, technological change, and returns to scale in four of the country's major food crops; maize, beans, banana, and cassava between 2005-2010. The study also established the determinants of technical efficiency during the same period. The results revealed that technical efficiency across the four food crop farming households remained low during the study period, and that there was still room to produce more output using the same resources and at the existing technology. Improvement in productivity was more as a result of intensified use of human labour than purchased inputs. In terms of policy, the results underscore the need for government to promote the use of purchased farm inputs through market interventions, pursue a land reform policy that will support farming households to secure and expand food crop area in rural areas, and provide education and extension support for both household heads and spouses. This study was privately funded and was supervised by Dr. John Mutenyo and Dr. James Muwanga

The Principal College of Computing and Information Sciences to present the following for the Conferment of the

Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

EILU Emmanuel

Anticipated User Experience (AUX) framework for implementing e-participation in a developing country context (case of mobile phone voting)

Mr. EILU Emmanuel investigated how citizens can engage government in decision-making processes in developing countries using Information and Communication Technology (ICT). His study found that whereas the use of ICTs such as mobile phones to engage government would improve citizen participation in the governance processes, however, political, social, economic and technological related challenges still pose a great challenge towards successful use of ICTs for citizen participation. The study developed a framework for successful adoption of ICTs for citizen participation. The framework provides more practical guidance on how policy makers and governments in developing countries can use ICTs to have a two-way engagement between citizens and governments in decision-making processes. This study was privately funded, and was supervised by Dr. Rehema Baguma and Prof. John Soren Pettersson.

OCHIENG peter

A large scale ontology matching tool based on a statistical predictive model

Mr. OCHIENG peter studied the matching of ontological semantic terms in a one to many fashion using a statistical predictive model. The statistical predictive model generated quality mappings with a precision value of 91.09 % and recall value of 91.68%. The statistical predictive model is scalable in terms of speed and computing resource utilization. Its speed outperformed all other state of the art techniques when matching ontology terms. The findings imply that

Internet search can be based on meaning as opposed to key terms. This study was funded by European Union through METEGA program and was supervised by Dr. Swaib Kyanda and Dr. Johnson Mwebaze.

MALI Bob

Evaluation of termites as a potential feed resource for poultry

Dr. MALI Bob researched on ethno characterization, ecosystem services, importance and management of termites in the rangelands of Nakasongola in an attempt to use the subterranean termites as an ingredient in commercial poultry feeds. The study sought to control termite populations within rangelands through harvesting of termites for use in commercial poultry feed. His study revealed two major pestiferous termite species with differences in their amino acid concentration, termite exhibition of bait preference, increase in bird growth rate and reduction in feed cost due to use of termite meal in broiler diet. Termite population management should focus on use of pestiferous species, as protein ingredients in poultry feed at 40-50% inclusion levels in combination with fish meal, for better bird growth rate and reduction in feed costs. This study was funded by the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD) and was supervised by Prof. Michael Ocaido and Dr. Samuel Okello.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

NSADHA Zachary

Porcine cysticercosis: prevalence, pathology and relationship with human epilepsy in selected Districts of Uganda

Dr. NSADHA Zachary investigated pork tapeworm, a disease of pigs and humans, and determined its prevalence, the factors for its existence and its co-existence with human epilepsy. For the first time his study demonstrated a mean prevalence in pigs of 22.21% in areas surrounding Lake Kyoga and major regional trade routes. The major factors for tapeworm existence in the study areas were; human defecation in open places, free-range scavenging pigs, inadequate knowledge about the disease in the communities, and inadequate control methods. The study also demonstrated that pork tapeworm and human epilepsy occurred in the same localities. To control pork tapeworm, all homesteads should have proper pit latrines; pigs should stay in enclosures; pork inspection should be mandatory and there should be continuous health education. The study was funded by Makerere University and supervised by Prof. Lonzy Ojok and Prof. George Nasinyama.

THURSDAY

The Principal Makerere University Business School to present the following for the Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

BASHIR Hassan

Strategic communication: a case of Ugandan health sector organizations

Mr. BASHIR Hassan studied strategic communication among health organizations in Uganda as explained by relational communication, information adequacy, communication behavior predictability and interaction quality. Through integrating insights from social network theory, uncertainty reduction theory, resource based view and complexity theory, the study revealed that health organizations need to maintain a relational bond with their audiences and use two way symmetrical communications in order to drive their audiences into behaviors that guarantee achievement of organization mission. The study recommends organizations to use direct communication systems with their audiences and carryout frequent stakeholder mappings in order to design and circulate audience tailored messages. The study was funded by Makerere University Business School and was supervised by Prof. Wasswa Balunywa, Prof. Joseph Ntayi and Dr. Muhammad Ngoma.

Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

GUKIINA Joshua

Organizational citizenship behavior of Uganda hotels' staff: the mediation role of organizational virtuousness

Mr. GUKIINA Joshua studied the role of harmonious interactions amongst staff and their behavior according to organizational standards, in facilitating them to offer extra services, while considering a morally upright work setting as a conduit for this to happen. Findings revealed that harmonious interactions amongst staff and their behavior in accordance with organizational standards are critical for them to engage in extra services, but that a morally upright work setting remains partly necessary for this to occur. Organizations should therefore instill a culture of harmonious interactions amongst their staff and ensure that they behave according to set standards so as to offer services beyond their jobs. This should be in addition to nurturing a morally upright work setting. This study was partly funded by the Belgium Technical Corporation, and was supervised by Prof Joseph M. Ntayi, Prof. Waswa Balunywa and Prof Augustine Ahiauzu.

Conferment of the
Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

MAKLU Nanteer Yonla

Self-employment among graduates in Nigeria

Mr. MAKLU Nanteer Yonla examined self-employment among graduates against the high unemployment rate in Nigeria. The study employed a multi-theoretical approach to explain the concept of self-employment. The study established that self-employment is explained by psychological capital, self-starting behavior and role model. The study informs policy by emphasizing the design and implementation of programmes, which encourage individuals with a positive mindset to start their own businesses. Additionally, individuals who have not started a business should undertake capacity building programmes and be willing to learn from successful individuals to run their business well. This study was funded by Tertiary Education Trust Fund (TEFUND) and was supervised by Prof. J.C Munene, Prof. Waswa Balunywa, Dr. Laura Orobia.

Conferment of the
Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

NKURUNZIZA Gideon

Business process reengineering performance in Uganda's financial institutions

Mr. NKURUNZIZA Gideon studied the relationship between organizational decision-making, institutional leadership, organizational adaptability and business process reengineering performance. The study established that knowledge management, institutional leadership and organizational adaptability are key predictors of business process reengineering performance. Further, organizational adaptability is a conduit through which institutional leadership improves business process reengineering performance. Financial institutions should institutionalize leadership that enables adaptive capabilities in a dynamic environment. Policy should focus to the management of actionable knowledge and communicate change with vision. As such, business process reengineering is critical in enhancing financial and workflow efficiencies. The study was funded by Makerere University Business School, and was supervised by Prof. Joseph M. Ntayi, Prof. John C. Munene and Prof. Will Kaberuka.

Conferment of the
Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

WALUGEMBE Ahmad

New product adoption in Uganda

Mr. WALUGEMBE Ahmad investigated the factors that influence new product adoption in Uganda with a focus on beverage manufacturing firms. The study established that organizational learning, dynamic marketing capabilities and consumer based brand equity are significant contributors to new product adoption in Uganda. This implies that, the more a firm learns continuously, dynamically utilizes its marketing capabilities of pricing, promotion and distribution and strengthens its consumer based brand equity, the more it influences adoption of its new products. Therefore, it is necessary to provide marketing support to new products that are of importance to economic growth to accelerate their adoption. The study was funded by African Development Bank (ADB) and Makerere University Business School, and was supervised by Prof. Joseph Ntayi, Dr. Geoffrey Bakunda and Dr. Muhammad Ngoma.

The Principal College of Engineering Design Art and Technology to present the following for the Conferment of the Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

BATTE George

Knowledge sharing, entrepreneurial capacity and diffusion of modern energy technologies (MET) in rural Uganda

Mr. BATTE George investigated differences in the dissemination of the fast diffusing mobile telephony technologies and MET, whose diffusion has remained low despite of the increasing demand, diversity of sources, technologies, projects and policies aimed at MET dissemination. He used these differences to develop a model for MET dissemination in rural Uganda, emphasizing the development of: community entrepreneurial capacity, knowledge sharing and rural technology entrepreneurs in the distribution of MET. The thesis recommended increased involvement of rural communities on the supply side of MET through business models that accommodate the limited financial and technical abilities of rural entrepreneurs. The study was self-funded, and was supervised by Prof. Joseph Byaruhanga and Prof. Izael da Silva.

MHANDO Yusuph Bakari

Investigation into detrimental variations in public building projects in Tanzania

Mr. MHANDO Yusuph Bakari investigated the extent of detrimental variations phenomenon in public building projects. Detrimental variations have plagued the construction industry in the region. The study revealed lack of a proactive approach for minimizing detrimental variations. Consequently, a model was developed and validated by using mixed quantitative and qualitative methods. The model's key input parameters include: thorough involvement of project stakeholders; adherence to contractual arrangements; adherence to ethical procedures; thorough feasibility studies; and precise contract management. Use of the model will minimize detrimental variations on building projects. This study was funded by the African Development Bank and Ministry of Education, Science and Technology of the United Republic of Tanzania through Arusha Technical College, and was supervised by Prof. Henry Alinaitwe and Dr. Ramadhan Mlinga.

The Principal College of Humanities and Social Sciences to present the following for the Conferment of the

Degree of Doctor of Philosophy

KASAMBA Julie (Ms)

Educational support provided for autistic children in an Inclusive Education setting in Primary Schools in Kampala Capital City Authority

Ms. KASAMBA Julie investigated Educational support provided for autistic children in an Inclusive Education setting in primary schools in Kampala Capital City Authority. Findings revealed that number of autistic children declined as they progressed in upper classes. Stigma, cultural beliefs, lack of knowledge among parents and routine commuting to school influenced their enrollment. There was a negative relationship between teachers' knowledge of autism in children and their satisfaction with education provisions for autistic children. Autistic children are technically left out on basic education hence educational support should be provided to autistic children in order for them to access basic education. The funder was Saint Augustine University of Tanzania and supervised by Dr. J.C. Enon and Prof. C.B. Mugimu.

KASULE Joseph

Islam in the State: a genealogy of the Muslim minority question in Uganda

Mr. KASULE Joseph's study engaged narratives that debated the systematic murder of Muslim personalities since 2012 as an entry to understanding the historical Muslim minority question in Uganda. Using a genealogical approach, the study demonstrated the politicization of responses to Islamic expressions. Focusing on the emergence of urban-based Muslim organizations juxtaposed to rural expressions of Islam, and the tension between representative claims of Muslim leaderships within the demand for Muslim autonomy, the study showed that emerging reform groups challenged the dominance of existing Muslim elites thereby fragmenting Muslim leadership in Uganda. The Muslim minority question entwined with emerging issues especially the nationality question, which shaped Muslims' responses to existing power. This study was funded by a Carnegie Corporation grant to MISR and supervised by Prof. Mahmood Mamdani.

KINDI Fredrick Immanuel

Women's and men's access to the private health facilities for child healthcare services in Iganga District, Uganda

Mr. KINDI Fredrick Immanuel investigated women's and men's access to the private health facilities for child healthcare services in Uganda. The study found that many women and men seek child healthcare services more from the private than the public health facilities. Private health facilities worked within the affordable means of clients by allowing partial and late payments. However, much as the private healthcare service providers were aware of gender concerns, they lacked the skills to address them. The study recommended the need to regulate the private healthcare facilities, especially, the informal healthcare facilities to meet the required minimum gender standards in service provision. This study was funded by NUFU and Makerere University Staff Development Program, and was supervised by Dr. May Sengendo and Prof. Fjortoft Kyersti.

KIZITO Michael George

Ethical implications of gendered neo-liberalism in Uganda's poverty policy planning frameworks (1986-2017)

Mr. KIZITO Michael George researched about Ethical Implications of Gendered Neo-Liberalism in Uganda's Poverty Policy Planning Frameworks. His thesis argues that although neo-liberalism has been dissimulated as an ideology that can be ethicized and engendered, its amoral positivistic essence is not in tandem with ethics, human rights and pro-poor empowerment for poverty eradication. Kizito contends that ethical poverty reduction is still elusive in Uganda because of the situatedness of Poverty Policy Planning Frameworks in an amoral and positivistic neo-liberal ideology. His thesis has created and defended a new framework for poverty policy planning in Uganda known as the Dignified Humanness Paradigm (DHP). The DHP is founded on the moral economy, a post-growth critique, androgynous gender ethics, human development sustainabilities and social justice liberalism. The thesis was partially sponsored by Kyambogo University, and was supervised by Dr. Byaruhanga Rukooko Archangel and Dr. Gervase Tusabe.

KUTEESA Mugenyi Disan

Epistemological base of African traditional herbal medicine in Uganda

Mr. KUTEESA Mugenyi Disan studied the Epistemological underpinnings for African traditional herbal medicine in Uganda, to understand why western medical practitioners have clear approaches but not their African counterparts. The study found that Bergsonian Empirical Intuitionism is the originative epistemic source for African traditional herbal medicine, while the Epistemological theory that explains its basis involves Malebranche's Theory and the Bucket Theory of Mind. Therefore, African thought though not on the same pedestals with western medicine, it is not primitive, it shares common traits with some western literatures and should be modified and improved. The Michael Gibbons Mode 2 Knowledge Production and Popperian Falsification Theory should be infused in African herbology to reduce falsity content and epistemic luck and put African traditional herbal on the same internationally recognized level with western medicine. The study was funded by Kyambogo University and was supervised by Prof. Edward Wamala and Dr. Wilfred Lajul.

Cross-linguistic influence in third language production among Swahili learners

Mr. MASENGO Innocent Jacodah studied the influence of previously acquired languages on the acquisition of Kiswahili as a third language in Uganda. Basing on a case study, learners with Runyankore and English as the first and second languages respectively, he found that the low proficiency in Runyankore negatively affected the speech of Kiswahili, with proficiency in English remaining neutral. This is because proficiency in the first language lays a foundation for further language learning. Therefore, English should not replace the first language in the school system, but rather, develop alongside it so as to enable learners benefit from the additive bilingualism. Such a linguistic background would facilitate the learning of a third language such as Kiswahili in Uganda. This study was funded by the German Academic Exchange Program (DAAD) and Makerere University Staff Development Program, and was supervised by Prof. Oswald Ndoleriire and Dr. Saudah Namyalo.

The transformation of Karamoja: sedentarization of pastoralists

Mr. MUHEREZA Emmanuel Frank investigated why development interventions in Karamoja are unlikely to end vulnerability to food shortages and halt rising absolute poverty. It analyzed the epistemological and theoretical foundations of preferred development pathways, their ruptures and continuities, to show how state violence re-ordered Karamojong society. Muhereza revealed how NRM government instrumentalized Karamojong cattle to return to Karamoja the 'absent state of Uganda'; and challenged the underlying logic of seemingly neutral development programs, arguing that addressing poverty was used as an entry point for re-engineering society in ways that made development a lever for state power enactment, while having very limited effects on poverty. This calls for a shift from 'development' as a 'colonization project' of governments, to development as a 'political project' that acknowledges intended beneficiaries as citizens with rights to shape their destinies. This study was funded by the John Frank Guggenheim Foundation through MISR, and supervised by Prof. Mahmood Mamdani.

Interrogating the economic empowerment of low-income entrepreneurs through microfinance loan services: a case study of Duterimbere MFI in Rwanda

Ms. MUKAMANA Liberata examined the contribution of microfinance loan services on the economic empowerment of low-income entrepreneurs in Rwanda. Findings revealed that microfinance initiatives (MFI) loan services initiated a series of interlinked benefits in the process of empowering poor female and male borrowers. The process begins when the loan is invested in profitable businesses that promote the earning capacity of the borrowers. Access to better income influences their decision making position in economic, socio-cultural and lego-political domains. Despite these positive outcomes on the life of female and male borrowers, the findings revealed that access to microcredit increased women's workload due to Rwandan cultural norms that consider reproductive roles as women-only domain. She recommended policy inclusion of interventions that can stimulate men's willingness to lessen women's reproductive responsibilities. This study was sponsored by UR-SIDA program and was supervised by Dr. May Sengendo and Dr. Edith Okiria.

Factors involved in social mobilization for citizen participation: an analysis of voluntary HIV/AIDS community initiatives

Mr. NYENDE Paul examined the factors involved in social mobilization and citizen participation in voluntary HIV/AIDS community initiatives while developing a path model of citizen participation and analyzing volunteer motivation. The findings confirm positive correlations among social capital, psychological sense of community, community organization social climate, member satisfaction, psychological empowerment and citizen participation. Psychological sense of community was a stronger predictor of psychological empowerment than group member satisfaction. The best practice for community initiatives is to emphasize psychological empowerment. The study was funded by Makerere-Swedish bilateral research cooperation and was supervised by Prof. Peter Baguma and Dr. Nambi.

The effect of early multiple literacies on learners' metalinguistic awareness: a cross linguistic investigation

Ms. RWAMO Alice studied the correlative and predictive power of early simultaneous trilingual literacy on young learners' metalinguistic awareness in three languages (English, French and Kirundi) taught in Burundi classrooms. She found that learners in the early simultaneous condition perform better on tasks assessing analytical abilities. Conversely, the late sequential group outperform on cognitively demanding tasks in either language. The findings of this thesis contribute to our understanding of the complexities of trilingual literacy exposure modes and cognitive development. This study underscores the need for policy makers to seriously consider the cognitive benefits associated with trilingual literacy modes prior to the promulgation of a new policy. This study was partially funded by the Government of Burundi and was supervised by Prof. Ruth Mukama.

The state and the puzzle of tribe: rethinking mass violence in Uganda's Rwenzori area

Mr. SSEREMBA Yahya examined the circumstances in which ethnicity is reproduced as an explosive basis for political and socio-economic inclusion in Uganda, particularly the Rwenzori area. Sseremba went beyond the Neopatrimonialism School, which blames problems in Africa on the designs of politicians, and shows how the post-colonial state is structured in a manner that gives rise to new ethnic fragments regardless of who assumes state leadership. At the center of this structure is the tribal homeland as a unit of the state. If Kasese and Bundibugyo districts were created as tribal homelands for the Bakonzo and Bamba, respectively, it means that other ethnic groups are second-class citizens there. To address such tension, there is need to institutionalize residence as opposed to ancestry as the basis for political belonging. This study was funded by Carnegie through Makerere Institute of Social Research, and was supervised by Prof. Mahmood Mamdani.

Militias, warriors and workers: capturing peasants and the making of a strong state and a weak society in Eritrea

Mr. TEMESGEN Tesfamariam Beyan investigated the impact of a century long militarization of peasantry society in Eritrea. He established that militarization was a double edge process. While it created a strong state, it produced a weak society. He innovatively theorized multiple use of militarization in Eritrea: as source of state power, as methods of breaking old mode of production, as a tool of capturing peasants and as routs of modernization. He proved that the uprooting of peasants' labour through militarization weakened the peasants' power and created a despotic state. Therefore, a remedy must involve the de-scaling of militarization, liberating the labour market and allowing the evolution of civil society. The work was funded by Carnegie Foundation through MISR, and was supervised by Dr. Samson Bezabeh and Prof. Mahmood Mamdani.
